

Audrey D. Solimon, MPH, is an enrolled Tribal member of the Pueblo of Laguna, New Mexico. Ms. Solimon works in the Public Health Division of the National Indian Health Board (NIHB), located in Washington, D.C., as the Program Manager for the Healthy Indian Country Initiative (HICI). Ms. Solimon graduated from the University of New Mexico (UNM) with Honors with a Bachelor of Science in Psychology and a minor in Biology (2001) and in 2006 she received her Master in Public Health degree from the UNM Department of Family & Community Medicine. Her most recent research experiences include behavioral health topics related to alcohol use/abuse and prevention among minority populations in the Southwest United States and community-based participatory research (CBPR) in American Indian Tribal communities. Her other areas of study include obesity prevention, teen pregnancy issues, historical trauma, fetal alcohol syndrome, and adolescent mental health topics all within Tribal communities. With her broad knowledge of public health issues within American Indian/Alaska Native communities she is able to provide a wide range of support for various projects at the NIHB. Ms. Solimon hopes to obtain her Doctorate in Public Health before returning to New Mexico to continue her work in the field of public health.
